DESIGNER

Ludovic Clément d'Armont

An engineer-turned-maker whose studio work reads as engineered lyricism, Ludovic Clément d'Armont composes lighting and object series that balance technical rigor with handcrafted flourish. Trained in engineering and long allied with mouth-blown glass and traditional metalwork, his pieces read as small architectures—precise assemblies that celebrate joinery, material contrast, and luminous presence. His practice treats lighting as a cultural instrument: fixtures are both measure and mise-en-scène, calibrated to modulate atmosphere while revealing the traces of craft. Repeated collaborations with ateliers for glass, porcelain, and brass reinforce a studio logic in which technique and imagination are contiguous. Presented by collectible-design galleries, d'Armont's objects occupy a line between decorative spectacle and disciplined restraint—works that assert themselves in domestic and institutional interiors as quiet infrastructural sculpture.
