Mesawa

Mesawa is a Mexican design brand founded by architect Santiago Sierra and designer Diego Linares, grounded in experimentation, material integrity, and functional clarity. Through rigorous research and a refined approach to construction, the studio creates furniture defined by considered contrasts, pairing precisely crafted steel with materials of distinct character to achieve a contemporary, minimalist expression. Central to Mesawa's practice is a belief that furniture should serve a purpose beyond decoration. Form emerges from function, necessity, and a process of reduction that gives empty space an active role within each composition. This philosophy is exemplified by the Volcanic series, where steel meets Mexico's volcanic stone, bringing together industrial precision and geological richness. The resulting works are quiet yet expressive, balancing versatility, material presence, and a bold spirit of experimentation.
