Rino Claessens

Rino Claessens (b. 1994) is an Eindhoven-based designer whose practice is grounded in material exploration and process-driven inquiry. A graduate of the Public & Private department at the Design Academy Eindhoven, Claessens has developed a methodology in which making itself becomes a form of research. The workshop functions as his primary creative domain, where experimentation with materials and techniques forms the conceptual and physical foundation of his work. Ceramics occupies a central position within Claessens' practice, valued for its tactile richness and seemingly limitless expressive potential. Deeply engaged with the medium's long and traditional processes through new forms, gestures, and applications. His work reflects a careful balance between intuition and control, allowing material behavior to actively inform the final outcome. While ceramics remains his principal focus, Claessens' curiosity extends beyond a single medium. He regularly experiments with cast bronze and hand-carved wood, broadening his material vocabulary and enriching his understanding of form, weight, and surface. Through this materially led approach, Claessens creates objects that foreground process, craftsmanship, and a renewed dialogue between historical techniques and contemporary design
