Sophie Rogers

Sophie Rogers is a Nottingham-based ceramicist who designs and handcrafts sculptural lighting and homewares from her home studio. Her practice is grounded in the ancient Japanese carving technique of Kurinuki, which she has adapted and expanded to develop a personal language capable of supporting large-scale, functional, and sculptural forms. Material exploration lies at the heart of Rogers's work. Her process is instinctive and tactile, guided by an intimate engagement with organic materials and the act of making itself. Drawing inspiration from geological formations and natural landscapes, she creates objects that balance elegance and restraint with a quiet sense form is paired with technical complexity, particularly in her ambitious use of scale. The Kurinuki process allows each piece to emerge through subtraction, revealing subtle variations that ensure no two works are ever the same. Through this method, Rogers produces bespoke objects that retain a strong sense of individuality while remaining functional and refined. Her work occupies a space between contemporary craft and design, offering sculptural pieces for the home that celebrate material honesty, process, and the enduring beauty of the handmade.
