Mark Mitchell

Mark Mitchell is a British designer based in Cheshire whose multidisciplinary practice encompasses furniture, lighting, and spatial design. Guided by curiosity, poetry, and quiet romance, his work explores the emotional resonance of objects and their capacity to create calm. A restrained palette of whites and soft neutrals, paired with bouclé, opal glass, and marble, gives his designs an ethereal, contemplative presence. Inspired by the sky, space, and the dignity of the natural world, Mitchell balances delicacy with purpose, creating works that invite stillness. His career began at sixteen, when a birdhouse conceived as a school project became his first licensed design. He studied Industrial Design at Brunel University, graduating in 2019, and was named among 10 Emerging Talents to Watch. His research into phase change materials in furniture was exhibited at DesignJunction during London Design Week 2017 in partnership with RADO. Working across Europe and Asia, Mitchell has developed a practice informed by manufacturing, physics, and psychology, uniting analytical rigour with poetic language.
