DESIGNER

Mark Mitchell

Mark Mitchell is a British designer based in Cheshire, whose practice spans furniture, lighting, and spatial design, unified by a distinctive sense of curiosity, poetry, and quiet romance. His work is celebrated for the calm it evokes—objects conceived not to command attention, but to gently hold it. Through a restrained palette of whites and soft neutrals, and materials such as bouclé, opal glass, and marble, Mitchell creates designs of ethereal presence and contemplative elegance. Deeply inspired by the sky, space, and the dignity of the natural world, his work balances delicacy with intent, offering moments of stillness within contemporary environments. Mitchell licensed his first commitment to making. He later studied Industrial Design at Brunel University, graduating in 2019, and was recognized as one of 10 Emerging Talents to Watch. His research project, The Application of Phase Change Materials in Furniture, was exhibited at DesignJunction during London Design Week 2017 in partnership with RADO. Following his studies, Mitchell worked across Europe and Asia, developing a broad creative practice informed by hands-on experience in manufacturing and design across disciplines. Drawing equally from physics and psychology, his process is both analytical and poetic—resulting in work that feels unusual, thoughtful, and quietly transcendent.
