DESIGNER

Angel Jové

Àngel Jové (1940–2023) was a Spanish multidisciplinary artist whose practice spanned painting, filmmaking, poetry, design, and architecture. A leading figure of Catalan conceptual art, he developed a body of work distinguished by its experimental spirit, poetic sensibility, and critical engagement with materials, space, and meaning. Throughout his career, Jové moved fluidly between disciplines, creating works that challenged conventions while maintaining a deeply personal and symbolic visual language. Beyond the art world, Jové left a lasting mark on design through his exploration of alabaster, most notably in the iconic Babel and Zeleste lamps created in collaboration with Santiago Roqueta. Transforming a humble material into sculptural and luminous objects of remarkable presence, these designs exemplified his ability to merge craftsmanship, conceptual thinking, and emotional resonance. Today, Jové is remembered as one of the most singular creative voices in contemporary Spanish culture, whose work continues to inspire across art, architecture, and design.
