Agglomerati

Agglomerati is a London-based design studio specializing in stone furniture and objects that celebrate the inherent beauty of natural materials. Founded in 2019 by Australian designer Sam Henley, the studio works exclusively with marble, travertine, limestone, and granite sourced from quarries around the world. Each piece is custom-made in collaboration with Italian stone artisans, ensuring both technical precision and a deep respect for the raw material. The designs are defined by clean geometry, generous proportions, and surfaces that highlight the unique color, veining, and texture of each stone block. Agglomerati's philosophy centers on permanence and tactility, creating designs that are as enduring in structure as they are timeless in aesthetic. With collections that blur the line between furniture and sculpture, the studio explores a dialogue between ancient material and modern form. Limited production runs and bespoke commissions further enhance the exclusivity of their work, making Agglomerati a respected presence in the global world of collectible design.
