Mesawa

Mesawa is a Mexican design brand founded by architect Santiago Sierra and designer Diego Linares, born from a shared commitment to experimentation, material integrity, and functional clarity. Rooted in deep research and continuous exploration, Mesawa's furniture is defined by refined contrasts, where industrial steel is elevated through precise craftsmanship and paired with materials of differing nature to achieve a modern, minimalist expression. Steel lies at the core of the brand's identity, shaping structures that are both subtle and expressive through clean, restrained lines. This language is further expanded in Mesawa's recent Volcanic series, which steel with volcanic stone. The result is a collection that emphasizes materiality, versatility, and a bold spirit of experimentation within contemporary furniture design. At the heart of Mesawa is the belief that furniture must serve a clear purpose beyond decoration. Each piece is conceived for use, with form emerging from function and necessity. Through a process of reduction and dematerialization, the brand preserves empty space as an essential design element, allowing each object to exist with clarity, balance, and quiet presence within the home.
