Margaux Leycuras

Margaux Leycuras is a ceramic artist who lives and works between Bordeaux, France, and California, shaping a practice that moves fluidly between architecture, landscape, and material expression. She is a graduate of the École Nationale d'Architecture de Nantes and began her career in high-end residential architecture in California, where prolonged engagement with spatial design, light, and materiality became the foundation of her ceramic work. Leycuras approaches ceramics as a natural extension of architectural practice, conceiving clay as a medium through which space becomes tactile and sensory. Her time in California profoundly informs her visual inherent qualities of clay, she allows texture, irregularity, and imperfection to animate each piece, granting the material a quiet vitality. Her work is further informed by the Japanese philosophy of wabi-sabi, with its reverence for impermanence, imperfection, and the subtle transformations brought about by time. These influences converge in a refined pursuit of balance and harmony, where minimalist forms reveal depth through surface, weight, and tone. Inspired by wilderness and shaped by powerful natural environments, Leycuras' ceramics are born of emotion and guided by the hand, offering timeless objects that invite contemplation of material, light, and presence
