DESIGNER

Abid Javed

London-based designer Abid Javed is known for ceramic works inspired by molecular biology and microbiology. His practice transforms complex scientific data into organic, architectural forms, each piece deeply rooted in concepts of growth, mutation, and transformation. Working primarily with porcelain and stoneware, Javed's ceramics are defined by intricate detail, fluid silhouettes, and a strong narrative component. Javed's work blurs disciplinary boundaries, existing at the intersection of design, science, and art. Exhibited internationally, his creations invite viewers to contemplate the invisible structures of life through tactile, hand formed objects that resonate as sculptures as much as functional pieces.
