Venelin Kokalov

Venelin Kokalov is a Bulgarian-born architect and founding principal of Revery Architecture, an internationally recognized Vancouver-based practice known for cultural, academic, and community-driven projects. Immigrating to Canada in 2002, Kokalov developed a practice grounded in the harmony between creative imagination and technical precision. His work reflects a deep respect for art and craftsmanship, integrating emerging technologies into compelling architectural narratives. Across diverse scales and typologies, he seeks to create meaningful experiences that elevate the human spirit and enrich everyday life. Kokalov's portfolio includes landmark projects such as the Xiqu Opera House in Hong Kong, PNE Amphitheater in Vancouver, Arena Stage Theatre in Washington, DC, and the Fazioli Butterfly Piano. Whether designing architecture, interiors, or objects, his approach remains distinctly human-centered, balancing innovation with poetic clarity. His practice demonstrates how architecture can transcend function to become an enduring cultural experience, shaped by material sensitivity, technological exploration, and a commitment to meaningful design.
