Venelin Kokalov

Venelin Kokalov is an architect born and raised in Bulgaria who immigrated to Canada in 2002. He is the founding principal of Revery Architecture, an internationally recognized Vancouver-based practice renowned for its cultural, academic, and community-driven projects. The firm's name encapsulates its guiding philosophy: the pursuit of harmony between creative reverie and technical precision, a balance that defines every aspect of its work. Grounded in a deep respect for art and craftsmanship, Kokalov is recognized for his ability to seamlessly integrate established and emerging technologies into compelling architectural narratives. His approach transcends the core of his practice lies a human-centered vision, one that seeks to elevate the spirit and enhance quality of life through thoughtful design. Kokalov's creative vision is embodied in a diverse portfolio of landmark projects, including the Xiqu Opera House in Hong Kong, the PNE Amphitheater in Vancouver, Arena Stage Theatre in Washington, DC, the University of Chicago Campus in Hong Kong, the Butterfly Tower in Vancouver, Simon Fraser University, the Surrey City Centre Library, and the Fazioli Butterfly Piano. Together, these works reflect a practice defined by innovation, poetic clarity, and enduring cultural impact.
